BERTIE BIRD in

"THE TROUBLESOME GIFT"

"I'm starting on my first migration trip today," Bertie Bird chirped excitedly to the Birdman.

"Is that so!" exclaimed the Birdman. "Then, here's a going-away gift for you." And he fastened an aluminum band around Bertie's leg. "Now, if somebody spots this band and writes the numerals printed on it, and your description, to the Bird Banding Society, I'll know where you spent the winter."

Bertie eyed the band uneasily.

"It won't cause you one bit of trouble," the Birdman assured him, little knowing how wrong he was!

Soon after, while flying over a big city, a howling wind caught Bertie and tore him away from his family. As he whirled through the air, his leg band snagged on the radio antenna of a passing taxicab. Helpless, Bertie was carried through the city to the airport, where he was rescued, at last, by the passenger of the taxi.

"Migrating, eh?" said the man, noting the band on Bertie's leg. "How about a lift?" And he whisked Bertie off in his plane.

After landing, the man pointed Bertie southward. "Fly that-a-way," he said.

Bertie followed the direction but, without his mother to guide him, he flew on and on until, finally, he flew into a pretty village in Mexico. And there, he met little Juan, who was rolling a Mexican jumping bean down the instep of his bare foot. Spying the jumping bean, Bertie cried, "Oooh, a BUG!" and, darting over, snapped it up, and gulped it down.

In the next moment, Juan had snatched him up and was racing down the street with him. Bertie was frightened.

"Do not be scared," said Juan. "I weel take you to the doctor. He weel get the bean and feex you up."

But the doctor was more interested in the band around Bertie's leg. "These numerals tell me this little bluebird has come from the United States," he said, as he copied the printing off the band to send to the Bird Banding Society. "Treat him kindly, Juan. He is a very special little bird."

So Juan put Bertie in a cage outside his father's sandal shop. "I weel take good care of you, leetle bluebird," he promised Bertie. "I weel go and dig beeg fat worms for you."

Bertie, however, did not stay long enough to get the worms, for, a few minutes later, an American traveler bought him from Juan's father. And, before long, the bewildered Bertie was back in the United States.

Upon reaching home, the kind traveler lifted Bertie out of his cage, wrote down his description and the numerals on his leg band, and set him free.

"Oh, thank you," cried Bertie happily, zooming up into a nearby tree. And there, strangely enough, he found his mother and brother, Billie!

"Mother!" cried Bertie.

"Bertie!" exclaimed his mother. "What happened to you? Where have you been?"

"Everywhere, I guess," said Bertie. And he told them about his adventures.

When Bertie returned to Apple Tree Lane, he paid a visit to the Birdman. "Why did you put this hateful band on my leg?" Bertie chirped. "It caused me lots of trouble. I was even locked up in a cage!"

Grinning, the Birdman offered Bertie some sunflower seeds.

"Now," twittered Bertie as he gobbled up the seeds, "THIS is more like it!"
